

Telemarketers intruding the privacy of homes has become epidemic. They feel they have "rights" to interfere with time spent w/our families. Late night calls are not uncommon which even interferes w/much needed sleep. We drop whatever we're doing to answer the phone... then it's a telemarketer with "rights".

As a cancer survivor who went through hellish treatment, I can tell you... I slept in a sick bed w/a phone on my pillow to keep in contact with my parents and children in case of emergency. But no matter how badly I wanted to sleep off the pain or illness, the telemarketer had "rights" to wake me with no regard to my suffering or privacy.

The Indiana anti-telemarketing law is an absolute MUST! Home life is so much more peaceful w/out the nagging ring of the phone. Those people have NO RIGHTS when it comes to my home. And for the government to say that they do, only goes to show how disfunctional the government is when it comes to what is "right".
